

I am informed that the FCC is considering implementing a telephone privacy regulation or law which is more lenient than that which the State of Indiana has put into effect by law. I am very much opposed to any rule, regulation or law that would enable an increase in the amount of telephone solicitation to which I might be subject. Since the implementation of the Indiana law the number of telephone solicitations my family and I receive has been reduced to almost none and I would like it to stay that way. I consider my telephone to be for my personal use and that of people I want to communicate with me. This has never and does not now include people or firms trying to sell me something or solicit donations for various causes.
